

Brexit Protest: Boycott Britain “Hunger Strike”

There are many unknown consequences but some obvious, inevitable ones are:

- Groups of racists and bigots in the UK and other countries, especially within the EU will feel optimistic that they can start to get significant political traction.
- All politicians will shift their stance (consciously or otherwise) to either appeal to the apparent majority racist/bigot or to the fear of this movement – i.e. a regression from modern middle ground politics to a more old-fashioned confrontational style.
- To disarm similar right wing movements in their own countries leaders in most of the EU will do everything within their power to make it appear that the UK has made a terrible mistake. i.e. Exchange Rate pressure, reduced cooperation over refugees and terrorism, encouragement to multinationals to move to more 'stable' commercial centres; the hope being that UK's recent good economic performance in comparison with the EU will descend dismally following 23rd June
- The EU will encourage Scotland and Gibraltar to split from the UK, probably Spain will be persuaded to drop its objection to Scotland's application in exchange for gaining Gibraltar. Whether the eventual movement into the EU is allowed to happen, the important objective will be to stimulate the most visible 'bad' consequences (from a nationalist/bigot perspective).

What can right minded people do?

- The worst thing that could possibly happen is that things get better after leaving. Even if things stay the same this must be seen to be a consequence of the UK accepting terms of negotiations with the EU which put it exactly back where it was before it left (free movement of labour, goods and services + human right, welfare etc.)
- However much it goes against our natures we must behave non-patriotically. We must buy EU goods and services wherever possible and boycott UK ones. A database should be set up listing goods which might have UK components or be manufactured here under license. We must choose foreign airlines for travel, buy EU manufactured cars and avoid eating out or using local entertainment as much as possible.
- Active lobbying of politicians and the press to keep the visibility of the brexit consequences as high as possible, for as long as possible.
- A general election should be held only once it can be shown that either the damage to the economy following the referendum is not just a blip but represents serious long term hardship or that absolutely none of the benefits of leaving the EU will materialise. This should also be timed to ensure the crushing, final demise of everybody involved in the brexit campaign.
- All the politicians active in the brexit campaign must be constantly held to account for anything bad that happens anywhere in the world, however tenuous the link (they did it so why not). Obviously any scandals or slurs on character should be dredged up.
